

Welcome to National Novel Writing Month (NaNoWriMo), the class where your budding writer will complete a novel by the end of the semester! Students will go through the entire noveling journey, from brainstorming, goal setting, plot and character development, and writing challenges. Once November hits, the students will be expected to write every day to work towards their word count goal. What is expected from you, parents? Simply to allow your student ample time to write their hearts out from November 1-30th. Through sharing their writing (only if they want to), and giving and receiving peer feedback, the process of writing their novel will be super fun and exciting! We'll wrap up the semester with revising, discussing publishing options, and of course, celebrating their very big accomplishment! This class is open to all ages of writers.
